Presenters: Art Slipp, Mayor of Woodstock; Adam Lordon, Mayor of Miramichi; TBA

(14:10 – 14:40) – Health Break/Silent Auction/Trade Show

#6 (14:40 – 16:10) – Conference Presentation: Recreating the Social Bond

The purpose of the presentation is to show different exhibits that the museum has tried: why the museum did it, how it did it and especially what the results were. At the end, the auditors can apply the different concepts in their museum environment.  Presenter: Dominque Gélinas, New Brunswick Museum

#7 (14:40 – 16:10) – Conference Presentation: Knowing Our Heritage Places

Launching the AHNB Inventory of Heritage Buildings in New Brunswick. Our communities and rural landscapes have a wealth of heritage buildings and it will benefit us in many ways to identify them and know their stories. This session will launch a major project of AHNB to work with groups and individuals to compile an inventory of these buildings and research them.

Presenters: Sherry Little, Chair of the AHNB Built Heritage Committee and Joan Pearce, Long time heritage advocate and member of Saint John Heritage.

Using the Archives to research heritage properties and structures

Archival records provide a major resource for information on heritage buildings. These presentations will focus on the use of textual records at the Provincial Archives to date houses and unearth stories of their construction and occupants, and will demonstrate the use of photographic evidence. Presenters: Rob Gilmore, Reference Archivist, Provincial Archives of New Brunswick and Josh Green, Photo Archivist, Provincial Archives of New Brunswick.
(16:15) – Historic Walking Tour: Michael Whalen’s grave, the poet of Renous, Monseigneur Hickey’s stained glass window in honour of the North Shore Regmt, Elm Park - honouring E. #1 (9:00 -10:00) – Conference Presentation: “Proud” Session / Museum Best Practices Join our facilitator for a chance to brag about what your museum does really well, and get some inspiration as you find out what others around the province are doing. This session is all about taking pride in the services we provide to the province, and our guests, and continuing to grow and innovate our programs through collaboration with our fellow heritage sites.

Presenter: Jim Bezanson has a broad background in issues involving conservation of our built heritage gained over the past 40 years working simultaneously as an architect, planner, educator, property manager and developer.

#2 (9:00 -10:00) – Conference Presentation: Deconstruction rather than Demolition

This session will discuss the Saint John experience, challenges and advantages of salvage versus demolition. It will cover embedded energy, life cycle cost of building materials, landfill costs, environmental impact, and the opportunity to train a new cadre of people in traditional building skills. Through the process of deconstruction, they can see how buildings go together and experience an excellent education opportunity.

#3 (10:00 – 11:00) – Conference Presentation: “Our Collections and Story Telling”

The presentation will begin with some guidelines to use when researching the story of an artefact. I will use examples from our collection including an item with primary sources in its provenance or a primary source itself. Then an item with no primary sources but clues to use in finding secondary sources to tell its story. Finally, an artefact with no provenance that we need to take a material history approach in researching. These artefacts will physically accompany the presentation. In summary the audience will hopefully look at their collections as having potential for a wealth of stories they can share with the community.

Presenter: Evelyn Fidler, Kings Landing

#4 (10:00 – 11:00) – Conference Presentation: Energy efficiency, sustainability, and old buildings: Staying warm and being green.

Are old buildings bad for the environment? This session provides an introduction to being green and comfortable in your old building. We will start with a discussion of why this has become such an important topic, as well as why the difference between sustainability and energy efficiency matters. Context will be given on what the building codes require, and what is expected to be introduced into future codes. The session will finish with a look at the different and at time contradictory instructions given to old buildings owners, alongside what are recommended practices.

Presenter: Tom Morrison is principal engineer with Heritage Standing Inc., a structural engineering firm based in Fredericton that specializes in historic buildings. The firm provides quality technical services based on international practices in the preservation, rehabilitation and restoration of historic structures.

Update on New Brunswick heritage structures under risk:

New Brunswick has a wealth of significant heritage buildings, wonderful streetscapes and neighbourhoods, and other iconic structures. Their conservation is important to our province. They evoke a sense of our past, illustrate the challenges we have faced and the successes we have had, are an important tourism resource, are of economic benefit, and their continuing use benefits our environment. AHNB continues to support local and specialized organizations in their efforts to conserve heritage buildings and structures across the province and to participate in advocacy initiatives. However, ongoing public education is needed to create an understanding and appreciation of the uniqueness and richness of our heritage buildings and to make heritage value top of mind.

Saint John’s North End. A significant proportion of older residences with fine interiors and constructed primarily of wood in the late 1800s and early 1900s (Queen Anne and Craftsman styles) have been permitted to deteriorate and are under threat of demolition. A workshop on Demolition versus Deconstruction, developed and hosted by Heritage Saint John, revealed several promising initiatives including Saint John Land Bank and Saint John Tool Library and Community Build Project that have promising implications for conservation of heritage buildings.

Rusagonis Covered Bridge

Covered bridges. The New Brunswick Department of Transportation and Infrastructure is undertaking an assessment of the condition of our covered bridges and transportation requirements for the areas they have served and has involved an expert in the construction and conservation of wooden bridges and other structures. The release of the first of a series of covered bridge stamps featuring the longest covered bridge in the world at Hartland has drawn national attention to New Brunswick’s iconic covered bridges. A tour of covered bridges for upwards of 40 people from New England organized by Bill Caswell, President of the National Society for the Preservation of Covered Bridges will take place in July. AHNB’s initiative “Love Your Covered Bridge” will continue this year with encouragement given to visiting one of our covered bridges on the New Brunswick Day over the August long weekend. Prizes will be offered as an incentive to participate.
Saint John County Court House. The Saint John Theatre Company and the province are finalizing an agreement to transfer title for the Courthouse property to the Saint John Theatre Company. The project will receive funding from the Department of Canadian Heritage and from ACOA to transform the former County Court House into a playhouse and performance centre and will need to raise additional funds. Built between 1826 and 1829, the building is an elegant example of late Georgian neoclassical architecture with marble floors, giant fluted pilasters and its most unique feature conserved, the free-standing, circular, interior staircase, cantilevered stone steps that rise three stories without other means of support. Vacant since the Saint John Law Courts relocated to new quarters the building was at risk although it has national, provincial and municipal heritage designations.

Saint John Synagogue. The former Synagogue, built as a Calvinist Church in 1871, has been converted into three floors of open offices, meeting rooms, and a cozy lunch room for Cooke Aquaculture. Much of the historic architectural detail of this heritage church retained. Previously city-owned and a provincial heritage site the brick building had been approved for demolition.
Risteen Building. Fredericton. The City’s earliest fine cut stone building was built in the early 1820s by the Surveyor-General of the time, Anthony Lockwood, as a residence that would rival the houses of judges and other public officials in Fredericton who had not taken kindly to his appointment. Later it accommodated the operation of Risteen wood working factory that operated until 1876 producing many of the windows and doors for public and private buildings in the city. It has been purchased by a developer whose intent is to demolish it to erect apartments on the site. On June 24 Fredericton City Council considered the proposal that Risteen Building be designated as a heritage building which, if passed, will add it to the heritage bylaw area and the property would then be regulated under the preservation review board.

Centennial Building Fredericton. The province’s centennial project is assessed by architectural historian John Leroux as representing the culmination of the International Style of High Modernism in New Brunswick. It sits with its south wing removed for repurposing as the Fredericton Court House since capital budget cuts halted work on the building.

Odell House Fredericton. Built in 1785 for Jonathan Odell, a Loyalist, a poet, a doctor, teacher and provincial secretary the residence was constructed in the style of early New England homes with simple shingle-clad wood framing, medium-pitched gable roofs, a lack of opulent Classically-inspired ornament in favour of ordered simplicity and slightly imperfect symmetry. It is considered important for its influence on subsequent residential architecture in New Brunswick. The residence, until recently, of deans of Christ Church Cathedral it was determined not to be needed by the church and put up for sale. The home has sold and as it is the heritage district it is afforded protection by the city’s heritage by-law.

Mary Grannan House Fredericton. The home of the celebrated children’s author and national CBC radio personality, Mary Grannan, who wrote the children’s Just May Stories and Maggie Muggins, was built in 1830 by Mary’s maternal grandfather. The building is vacant and has fallen into disrepair. Fredericton Heritage Trust has met with the owner who indicates a willingness to conserve the building which is designated as a provincial heritage site. As its condition continues to deteriorate, and now suffer from vandalism, attention is urgently needed.
Post Office Bathurst. The Mayor of Bathurst, Pao-lo Fongemie, has indicated that he is committed to saving the Post Office to provide a new home for Royal Canadian Legion Herman Good VC Branch War Museum. Its future was of concern after a large piece of timber fell from its clock tower. Designed by Canada’s Chief Architect, Thomas Fuller, the two-and-a-half-storey stone building built in 1885 was among a number of post offices constructed in the Romanesque style. The building, designated a provincial heritage site in 1989, is an architectural gem and recalls the federal government’s desire to build structures that conveyed strength and stability helping to foster a federal presence across our new nation.

Another Fuller-designed Post Office in St. Stephen, that had served as Town Hall, was under threat of demolition several years ago until it was purchased by a heritage developer.

Officers Square Fredericton. Alterations are underway by the City of Fredericton to convert the national and provincial historic site to a large concert venue with the addition of a large stage, replacement of a historic fence, destruction of the foundation of the former married quarters, installation of an ice-skating rink with freezing mechanism. These changes will disturb archaeological remains potentially obliterating the evidence of indigenous, Acadian, British and military occupation on the site, place at risk the trees that shade and beautify the site and remove the sense of historic place that the Square evokes. A citizens’ committee, SOS (Save Officer’s Square, (now a committee of Fredericton Heritage Trust) has asked the Provincial Minister responsible for heritage to address heritage concerns before permits are issued that will permit the City to proceed. Meanwhile a recent news release on summer construction in the City indicated that work on the Square would take place although the Garrison District Master Plan states that "Construction of any component of the plan will not occur until stakeholders and the public are consulted at both schematic and detailed design phases. These phases will be determined based on considerations that include forthcoming infrastructure investments, civic value, cost and feasibility."
Upcoming Webinars:

Our MAP application was approved for the 2019/2020 webinars. We will contact our members as we approach each webinar with more information.

November 27th at 7 pm
Dr. Cynthia Wallace-Casey, AHNB Admin. Officer
Museums, Heritage, and Reconciliation in New Brunswick - This webinar will define reconciliation while also demonstrating how museums can develop a Reconciliation Action Plan. The instructor will discuss repatriation of collections, noting examples from the Canadian Museum of History and other sites in this country.

January (TBA)
Donald Alward, Westmorland Historical Society
Creating a Museum Visitor Experience - Instruction on how to most effectively create a memorable museum visitor experience. The foundation of any museum is its visitor-ship, and in order to attract new visitors and to keep the local community interested and involved, an engaging and positive visitor experience is key.
